An exclusive control is only a "jurisdictional basis." As the case is factually different than our case, because of the words used, I have recited the facts as I do not deem it necessary to do otherwise. If we are to change the language of the rule, it will come from the supreme court. NOTES [1] See also Byers v. State, 65 S.W.3d 821 (Tex.App.-Fort Worth 2002, no pet.). Ask HN: Should I mention that I work at this startup when I apply for YC? - michaelbach Hi HN, I'm an applicant to the YC batch (startup) which I also work at. I'm curious if this is going to be a problem and how I should go about explaining this to people I am corresponding with. ===== chatmasta Is your startup hiring? How do you plan to fit into the teams you're going to join? You can always answer these questions when you have an interview with the program, but just because you're there doesn't mean you can't start working. If you're worried you will sound like a leech, remember YC is investing in you more than you are in them. They're making an investment in you, and they will invest a lot of time and resources to help you grow your startup, and take it to the next level. ----- charlieo88 It's definitely not a problem, even if it is an above board startup you're working for. A lot of the other startups you'll be meeting are YC companies, it's an awesome opportunity to network with those people. Good luck! kyrre Nope, I've interviewed at both iBoot and LinkedIn before they were YC companies and didn't think twice about it.
